on the 1st September 1885 The land in question was the property of the first defendants (the Port Trustees) and was in their possession at the date of the accident to the plaintiff but an agreement had been made whereby it was to be leased by them to the second defendant who was accordingly let into possession in January 1886 For some years the first defendants had been in the habit of letting out the greater part of the land for tenting purposes in lots marked out with pegs but the tents were taken down each monsoon For two or three years previously to the accident people had been accustomed to cross the land without any hindrance or prohibition The plaintiff himself had used the path across the land as a short cut for a period of eighteen months This path led across the tenting ground to a gate which was generally open and which opened upon the high road No express permission had ever been given to any of the person who were in the habit of using this path It was a mere beaten track and so far from being a public way it was from time to time obstructed in the tenting season by the ropes and pegs of the tents The plaintiff had for some time been in occupation of a bungalow belonging to the first defendants which was situated in that part of the land which was furthest away from the high road. There was a regularly constructed roadway from the bungalow to the high road which the plaintiff might have used but as a short cut he and others were in the habit of using the beaten track. For this he had merely a tacit permission On the morning of the 1st September 1885 he left his bungalow and went to his business as usual by the short cut across the land When returning by the same way at about 11 o clock at night he fell into the hole which had been dug in the afternoon of that day and sustained the injuries complained of The hole was several feet deep and was dug right across the pathway The plaintiff had no notice of the hole being dug or of any intention to dig it The night was very dark and there was no negligence on the part of the plaintiff nor any want of ordinary care and caution There was no watchman and no fence nor was there any light which might enable persons using the path to avoid the danger The second defendant as above stated had agreed to take the said land from the first defendants on lease for building purposes On the day of the accident some months before the execution of the lease the second defendant through his engineer and contractor H applied to the first defendants for permission to make borings in the land which permission was given H thereupon caused the hole in question to be dug In their written statement the first defendants contended that in using the short cut across their land the plaintiff was a trespasser and that he had used it without their knowledge or consent that the hole was dug without their knowledge and that the borings for which they had given permission were merely small holes of a diameter of six inches or thereabout which could not have been a source of danger

The second defendant pleaded that at the time of the accident he was not in possession of the land but had merely entered into an agreement for a lease of it that he had employed a competent engineer and contractor H to make borings in order to ascertain of what the sub soil consisted and that H contracted to do the work and obtain leave from the first defendants to enter on the land that the said H subsequently entered on the land and according to his own discretion and without any control or interference from him (the second defendant) took such steps as he thought necessary to ascertain the nature of the said sub soil and he (the second defendant) contended that if there had been negligence in the performance of the work he was not liable Held (i) that there was negligence in digging the hole across a path used by several licensees and in not placing any person or light to warn passengers of the danger arising from the hole and the excavated earth which was heaped up near it Held (ii) that the first defendants were not liable to the plaintiff. The permission which they had given to H was a permission to make borings only and the hole which was actually dug by H was dug without their knowledge or permission H was not shown to be in any sense their servant or agent The plaintiff was a bare licensee and the first defendants were under no obligation to him to keep the path in a safe state or in good order Held (iii) that the second defendant was liable to the plaintiff H was not a contractor in the legal sense so as to exempt the second defendant from responsibility but was the servant of the second defendant pro hac vice and that the digging of the hole was within the course of his employment or within the scope of his authority The Court of first instance awarded as damages a sum of R33 000 which on appeal was reduced to R17 000 EVANS v TRUSTEES OF THE PORT OF BOMBAY street selling cucumbers about four yards from the manhole in question. The hole was at first properly fenced with four timber hurdles about 4 feet high set upright round it at a distance of 2 feet from the hole secured at the corners with ropes Soon after 4 30 P M the superintendent in charge of the work gave orders to cease work and close the manhole for the night. The accident took place almost immediately afterwards The Judge found on the evidence that the child fell into the open hole in the interval that elapsed between the taking down of the fence and putting the cover on the hole What she was doing the instant before she fell there was nothing to show She was seen running and playing about the street during the afternoon Her mother who was sitting close by did not see the accident her attention being at the moment occupied by some customers She admitted that before the accident occurred she knew the fence was down and the hole open and she would not have left the child go to it had she child might have been guilty of negligence which contributed to the accident yet if the defendants could by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence have avoided the mischief which happened her negligence would not excuse them (iii) that as regards damages in cases of this nature distinct evidence of the loss sustained or benefit expected is not necessary The jury may look at all the circumstances of the case and especially at the position of the parents and age of the child and call in aid their own experience in arriving at their conclusions Where damages are allowed a reasonable sum should be deducted on account of the maintenance for such period as the child might reasonably have been expected to live with her parents In an action under Act XIII of 1855 no sum can be awarded in respect of funeral expenses whether for removal or disposal of the body or for outlay—for ceremonial or religious purposes NARAYEN JETHA v MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONERS OF BOMBAY I L R 16 Bom 254

The plaintiffs claimed R3 996 as damages. The defendant denied the negligence and alleged that the work was not done by his servants or agents but by a contractor Held that the defendant was liable for the act of his contractor The work was necessarily attended with risk and the defendant could not free himself from liability by employing a contractor The defendant as well as the contractor was liable to the plaintiffs DHONDIBA KRISHNAJI v MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONERS OF BOMBAY I L R 17 Bom 307

1 ———— s 55—Municipal Board—Power of Municipal Boards to frame bye laws—N W P and Oudh Municipalities Act (XV of 1873) s 22 —Nuisance. Cl. (c) of s 55 of Act XV of 1883 was not intended to empower a Municipal Board to make rules which would enable it to confiscate private rights without making any compensation or to treat as nuisances acts which are not in law or with regard to public health or convenience capable of being considered nuisances The clause was meant to give to Municipal Boards power to make rules for prohibiting the establishment of markets that is to prevent new markets being established and to give them power to control the maintenance of existing markets or of markets which might be established with their sanction By maintenance is meant the keeping up of a market in such a manner as would make it a fit place for the carrying on of a market having regard to public health and public convenience GANGA NARAIN v MUNICIPAL BOARD OF CAWNPORE I L R. 19 All. 313

2 ———— and s 71—Municipal rules —Infringement of rules—Prosecutions—N W P Government Notification No 865 dated the 3rd November 1869—Rule VI legality of Municipal Boards and Magistrates should see that before prosecutions are instituted under the municipal rules care is taken that the requirements of s 69 of Act XV of 1883 (N W P and Oudh Municipalities Act) are satisfied. A District Magistrate who was also Chairman of a Municipal Board having information that a certain person had evaded the payment of octroi duty directed his prosecution for breach of municipal rules The Magistrate in thus causing proceedings to be taken acted wholly of his own motion and authority The accused was tried and convicted under Rule 6 Government N W P Notification No 865 dated the 3rd November 1869 read with s 45 of Act XV of 1873 (N W P and Oudh Municipalities Act) This rule provided that any person evading or abetting the evasion of the octroi duties specified in a schedule should be deemed to have committed an infringement of a bye law It purported to have been made under s. 12 of Act VI of 1868 (Municipal Improvements Act N W P) which authorized the making of rules as to the persons by whom and the manner in which any assessment of taxes under this Act shall be confirmed and for the collection of such taxes Held that assuming the rule to have been legally made under s 12 of Act VI of 1868 which was not clear and that it was saved by s 2 of Act XV of 1873 it would as declared in s 71 of Act XV of 1883 (N W P and Oudh Municipalities Act) continue in force until repealed by new rules made under such last mentioned Act and be deemed to have been made under that Act and its operation was therefore subject to the provisions of that Act sides. On appeal by plaintiff against this order of remand —Held (i) that there is nothing in ss 9 to 11 of the Indian Oaths Act 1873 which allows a party who has agreed to the administration of an oath under those sections to retract after the opponent has accepted the proposal (ii) that the Act gives the Court a discretion to administer the oath or not and though it should not administer it if good grounds be shown for retracting it is justified in so doing notwithstanding the retraction if the grounds are frivolous (iii) that if the matter stated as referred to in s 11 of the Act affords sufficient material for the decision of the suit a decree may be passed on the facts so proved But if the facts so proved are not sufficient for the decision of the case such further facts as are necessary should be proved by evidence adduced on both sides The Act provides not for the adjustment of a suit in an arbitrary way but merely for the conclusive proof of facts such facts if not sufficient for the decision of the suit should be supplemented by facts duly proved by evidence and (iv) that the facts proved by the special oath are conclusively proved and any further evidence that may be taken should be limited to matters not proved by the oath THOYI AMMAL v SUBBAROYA MUDALI

2 ——— Destruction of book by order of Criminal Court—Penal Code s 293—Act X of 1872 (Criminal Procedure Code) s 418 A book may be obscene within the meaning of the Penal Code although it contains but a single obscene passage. The defence to a charge of selling and distributing certain obscene books was that they were sold and distributed in good faith in prosecution of a religious controversy. Held that the excessive obscenity of such books took away the protection which their controversial nature might otherwise have afforded them. Held also that the intention of the seller and distributor must be gathered from the character of the matter contained in such books. As he had chosen to sell and distribute what was obscene it must be presumed that he intended the natural consequences of his act namely corruption of the minds and prejudice of the morals of the public. It was not sufficient for him to say that his intentions were good. It was his public act that must be the test of his intentions and having done an unlawful act it was no answer to say that he thought it lawful. Queen v Hicklin L R 3 Q B 360 and Steele v Brannan L R 7 C P 261 followed. At the conclusion of the trial of a person for the sale and distribution of obscene books the Court trying him ordered the destruction of certain copies of such books voluntarily surrendered by him under s 418 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Held that such Court was not empowered by that section to make such an order. 1 ———— Negligence—Hiring—Accident—Evidence Act (I of 1872) s 106—Contract Act (IX of 1872) ss 150 151 152 The question of the burden of proof in cases of accidental injury to goods bailed depends upon the particular circumstances of each case In some case from the nature of the accident it lies upon the bailee to account for its occurrence and thus to show that it has not been caused by his negligence. In such cases it is for him to give a prima facie explanation in order to shift the burden of proof to the person who seeks to make him liable If he gives an explanation which is uncontradicted by reasonable evidence of negligence and is not primâ facie improbable the Court is bound in law to find in his favour and the mere happening of the accident is not sufficient proof of negligence S hired a horse from W and while it was in his custody it died from rupture of the diaphragm which was proved to have been caused by over-exertion on a full stomach against a young man recently come of age—Presumption—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881) s 118—Evidence Act (I of 1872) s 114 ill (c) Professional money lenders sued a young man recently come of age to recover certain loans of money alleged to have been advanced by them to him on promissory notes The defendant who under the will of his father was entitled to a large property but had not yet come into possession of it was of an extravagant and reckless character He pleaded as to part of the consideration for the notes that he did not receive it and as to a further part that the consideration was immoral In dealing with the case the Court laid down the following propositions not as rules of law but as guides in considering the evidence in such a case (i) That upon the above facts the ordinary presumption that a negotiable instrument has been executed for value received was so much weakened that the defendant s allegation that he had not received full consideration was sufficient to shift the burden of proof and to throw upon the money lenders (the plaintiffs) the obligation of satisfying the Court that they had paid the consideration in full That is the practical effect of ill (c) to s 114 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) (ii) Where the plaintiff in answer to such a defence affirmed that he had paid the consideration in full and was corroborated by his books and [illegible] which the Court felt able to rely upon with confidence In the absence of this the ordinary presumption laid down in s 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881) must prevail viz that until the contrary is proved the presumption should be made that every negotiable instrument was made for consideration MOTI GULABCHAND v MAHOMED MEHDI THARIA TOPAN

Presumption of death One S died in September 1878 leaving a widow B The year before his death his only son (Bala) a child of eight years old had left his home and was never heard of again A few days before his death S adopted the plaintiff (his nephew) and executed a deed of adoption which stated that he had no hope that his son Bala was alive and that he had therefore adopted the plaint

the plaintiff as S s adopted son brought this suit to recover some of S s property which was in the hands of the defendants who claimed it as S s heirs They (inter alia) impeached the plaintiff s adoption. Held that in order to recover the pro perty as the adopted son of S it lay on the plaintiff to prove a valid adoption It was a condition pre cedent to prove that at the date of the adoption S was without a son It was therefore for the plaint iff to prove that Bala was then dead There was at that time no presumption that Bala was dead and there being no evidence on the point it was impos sible to say when he died or consequently that the adoption was valid Held however that plaintiff was entitled to succeed as donee under the deed of adoption. It was clearly S s intention to give the estate to the plaintiff as being his adopted son But if the adoption was invalid the gift had no effect. The onus here was on the defendants. It was for them to show that Bala was at that date alive and the adoption therefore invalid That burden they had not discharged and the plaintiff therefore was entitled to a decree Per FARRAN C J —Where a deed of gift or will confers an estate upon a named person because he fills or by reason of his filling a certain character he is entitled to recover the estate without affirmatively proving that he fills such character The onus of proving that he does not fill the character which is the reason of the gift lies upon those who dispute his claim The whole question is one of onus of proof RANOO BALAJI v MUDIYEPPA moiety by the defendants and that there is no other legal heir except the deponents the mutation in respect of the deceased s share in all the villages should be allowed and nobody has any objection thereto and the revenue authorities effected mutation of names in that way In 1902 partition which left the parties in the same state as to possession was effected in accordance with the provisions of the Oudh Land Revenue Act (XVII of 1876) In a suit brought in 1904 to recover possession as heir of the deceased of the half share held by the defendants the latter pleaded (inter alia) that their possession was the result of a compromise come to between the parties in the mutation proceedings which was evidenced by the document of 1896 and that the plaintiff was estopped by such mutual arrangements from asserting his present claim Held by the Judicial Committee (affirming the concurrent decisions of both the Courts in India on the evidence) that there was no proof of any compromise The mutation of names by itself created no proprietary title The document of 1896 contained no words that could be construed as amounting to an abandonment by the plaintiff of his legal rights It was merely a statement of the facts as they existed as to the possession of the property and by its silence as to a compromise tended to support the conclusion that no compromise was ever made In the partition proceedings the plaintiff made no objection to the defendant s title under s 74 of Act XVII of 1876 but he filed an application in which he asked that the share of Mannu Singh (the deceased) should be decided at present according to possession and a separate suit will be filed in a competent Court as regards the title in respect of the property of Mannu Singh Both the Courts in India concurred in decreeing to the plaintiff the shares of the deceased in 29 of the villages but as to one village they differed the [illegible]

The co sharer made a deposition in which he alleged that he was entitled to the rent not only as a co sharer but also as the appointed agent of the plaintiff The Court thereupon made him a party to the suit under s 148 of the Rent Act and passed a joint decree against him and the tenants for rent. Held that the Court was justified in making him a party under s. 148 of the Rent Act but was not competent to pass a decree for rent against him. A party who is brought in under s. 148 of the Rent Act cannot be made subject to the decree for rent so as to allow execution to be taken out against him whether his bona fide receipt and enjoyment of the rent is proved or not The only person against whom such a decree can be passed is the tenant. Madho Prasad v Ambar I L R 6 All 503 referred to Per EDGE, C J—Semble That the intention of the Legislature in allowing a third person who claims under s. 148 of the Rent Act to be made a party to the suit may possibly have been that by bringing him in he may be bound by a declaration in the suit that he had in fact received the rent so as to prevent him in the civil suit from denying the fact that he had received it. In a suit by a landholder for recovery of rent in which a third person alleged to have received such rent is made a party under s 148 of the N W P Rent Act (XII of 1881) the question of title to receive the rent cannot be determined between the plaintiff and such person but can only be litigated and determined in a subsequent suit in the Civil Court The only question between the plaintiff and the person so made a party which can be determined in the Rent Court under s 148 is the actual receipt and enjoyment of the rent GOBIND RAM v NARAIN DAS I. 21. ———— Civil Procedure Code 1882 s 265—Revenue paying estate—Beng Act VIII of 1876 Part II and s 4 cls (8) and (9)—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) s 265 In 1851 an estate was brought under butwarra under the provisions of Regulation XIX of 1814. At such butwarra a portion of the estate being covered with water and unfit for cultivation was not divided but left joint amongst all the co sharers the land revenue payable on account of the whole estate being apportioned amongst the several estates into which the portion divided was split up. Subsequently on the portion remaining joint becoming dry and fit for cultivation, an application was made by one of the co sharers to the Collector to partition the same under the provisions of Bengal Act VIII of 1876 but that officer refused to do so on the ground that the land did not bear an assessed revenue and was not shown in the towzi. In a suit brought under the above circumstances to compel the Collector to make the partition and in the alternative to have it made by the Civil Court —Held that though the reason given by the Collector for refusing was an erroneous one he was not bound to make the partition under the provisions of Bengal Act VIII of 1876 as the land in suit was not liable for the payment of one and the same demand of land revenue and was therefore not a joint undivided estate within the terms of s. 4 cl. (9) of that Act. Held also that the word estate as used in s. 265 of the Civil Procedure Code must not be construed in the same limited and defective sense in which it is used in Act VIII of 1876 but must be taken to be there used in its ordinary signification, and that consequently the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for partition under the provisions of that section. Chundernath Nundy v Hur Narain Deb I L R 7 Calc 153 approved. was obtained is no argument against its being a useful invention within s 25 Act XV of 1859 Cannington v Nuttal L R 5 H L 205 followed as to the test of novelty in an invention In deciding whether a machine patented as an entire invention is an imitation and piracy of another machine previously patented as an entire invention the question is —Is the later patented machine substantially the same as the earlier one? The fact of considerable differences existing in the several parts of the two machines will not prevent the latter machine from being as a whole a copy of the earlier one even where an exclusive privilege might have been acquired had the alterations in the later machine been claimed as improvements on the earlier one Clark v Adie 2 App Cas 315 followed. Where a patent has been obtained for a machine which the patentee subsequently somewhat improves a subsequent specification claiming the improved machine as a novel combination is bad though the improvement might be claimed and protected as such. Where a new arrangement of the parts of a machine is claimed as an improvement the arrangement must be clearly described in the specification The mere substitution of one mechanical equivalent for another already in use will not protect it Where a case of infringement of a patent has been made out an injunction will follow as a matter of course A plaintiff cannot pray for an account of profits and for damages He must elect between the two remedies If the plaintiff elects to take an account of the profits such accounts will only be carried back to the period of one year before the filing of the plaint in accordance with Act IX of 1871 Art 11 KINMOND v JACKSON KINMOND v LAWRIE I L R 66 plaintiff was heard and the order was confirmed Thereupon the plaintiffs applied in execution (inter alia) for payment of the sum of R140 8 0 The defendant contended that he had already paid it The Subordinate Judge directed the defendant to pay this sum into Court within one month The plaintiff who had not obtained a stay of execution could not refuse to take it because an appeal was pending The plaintiff s refusal therefore to take the money out of Court did not justify the Subordinate Judge in treating the money as the defendant s and in ordering it to be paid to another judgment-creditor of the defendant without his having in any way expressed his assent to

4. ———— Exciting disaffection—Meaning of the term disaffection explained Any one who by any of the means referred to in s. 124A of the Penal Code excites or attempts to excite feelings of hatred dislike ill will enmity or hostility towards the Government established by law in British India excites or attempts to excite as the case may be feelings of disaffection as that term is used in s 124A Such feelings are necessarily inconsistent with and incompatible with a disposition to render obedience to the lawful authority of Government and to support that Government against unlawful attempts to subvert or resist it. The term disaffection may be taken as synonymous with disloyalty The ordinary meaning of the term disaffection as used in s. 124A is not varied by the explanation appended to that section When a person is charged with having committed the offence punishable under s 124A of the Penal Code his intention may be inferred from one particular speech article or letter or from that speech article or letter considered in conjunction with what such person has said written or published on another or other occasions. Where it is ascertained that the intention of such person was to excite feelings of disaffection to the Government established by law in British India it is immaterial whether or not the words spoken written or published could have the effect of exciting such feelings of disaffection and it is immaterial whether the words were true or were false and except on the question of punishment or in a case in which the speaker writer or publisher is charged with having excited such feelings of disaffection it is immaterial whether or not the words did in fact excite such feelings of disaffection Queen Empress v Jogendra Chunder Bose I L R 19 Calc 35 In re the petition of Bal Gangadhar Tilak I L R 22 Bom 112 referred to QUEEN EMPRESS v AMBA PRASAD above specially the words Fight again were a direct instigation to the Ghatis and Kamatis to renew the disturbances Held that the meaning of the passages complained of was to be gathered from the whole poem The general spirit of the poem was clearly in favour of peace and reconciliation It consisted from beginning to end of a lamentation over the riots and the destruction and death they had caused and of repeated counsel to peace and harmony between Hindus and Mahomedans And there was nothing to indicate that the author s intention was to instigate the Hindus or provoke the Mahomedans to renew the disturbances The words Fight again were no doubt objectionable but it would not be a proper construction of the words to allow them to override the whole context of the work The composition could not be regarded as an illegal act and its publication was not malignant or wanton within the meaning of s 153 of the Penal Code QUEEN EMPRESS v KAHANJI I L R 18 Bom 758

1. ——— False information—False charge—Distinction between the two offences The accused sent a telegram to the Collector of Patnagiri in his capacity of the head of the Municipality at Vengurla to the effect that "Head Master English School (Vengurla) misappropriated P 168 of fees since October Please investigate yourself soon" For this the accused was convicted under s 182 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) on the grounds that he had no probable cause for making the assertion contained in the telegram and that he probably knew that a peon had confessed that he was guilty of the misappropriation. Held that on these facts the charge under s 182 of the Code could not be legally sustained The offence made punishable by s 182 of the Indian Penal Code is a distinct offence from that described in s 211 of the Code which relates to an attempt to put the Criminal Courts in motion against another person The action which s 214 renders penal is action entailing very serious consequences and therefore the more serious consideration is required on the part of the individual who takes it It is sufficient in such cases for the prosecution to establish that there was no just or lawful ground for the action taken and that the accused knew this But something more is required in the case of action referred to in s 182 To bring a case within that section it is necessary for the prosecution to prove not merely absence of reasonable or probable cause for giving the information but a positive knowledge or belief of the falsity of the information given EMPEROR v RAMCHANDRA (1906) I L R 31 Bom. 204

virtue of its etymological origin extends to any state of the mind which is wrong or faulty (whether evidenced in action by excess or defect) such as feeling should in all cases be established by evidence extrin ic to the comment which is the subject of the complaint For whether fair comment is to be regarded as falling under a branch of the law of privilege or not it cannot excuse an injury arising not from the mere act of criticism but from a state of mind in the critic which is in itself unjustifiable and the excu e may be so forfeited either by reason of an evil intent in him or by rea on of mere recklessness in making an unwarrantable assertion For then the comment would not be fair comment at all Apart from extrinsic evidence of malice protection must be withheld even from what purports to be criticism if it states as a fact to be inferred from the book criticised an imputation for which the book itself contains absolutely no foundation whatever The right of fair comment involves two essentials first that the imputation should be comment on the work criticised and second that it should be fair, —that is to say that if it professes to be an inference drawn from the contents of that work it must be an inference which it is possible to draw therefrom

Good faith requires not indeed logical infallibil ity but due care and attention But how far erroneous actions or statements are to be imputed to want of due care and caution must in each ca e be considered with reference to the general circum stances and the capacity and intelligence of the person who e conduct is in question It is only to be expected that the honest conclusions of a calm and philosophical mind may differ very largely from the honest conclusions of a person excited by sectarian zeal and untrained to habits of preci e reasoning At the same time it must be borne in mind that good faith in the formation or expression of an opinion can afford no protection to an imputa tion which does not purport to be ba ed on that which is the legitimate subject of public comment The object of exception 6 to 499 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) is that the public hould be aided by comment in its judgment of the public performance submitted to its judgment formance It follows that an imputation on an author made by a critic without refer nce express or implied to the work under criticism if in term so general as to be capable of conveying an unfavourable impres ion of him apart from what app ars in his work cannot be justified by the critic on the ground that his intention was to base his imputation solely on the work reviewed and that he had in his mind pas ages therein supporting the imputation The respon ibility of the critic is to

virtue of its etymological origin extends to any state of the mind which is wrong or faulty (whether evidenced in action by excess or defect) such as would be unjustifiable in the circumstances and in compatible with thoroughly innocent intentions It is not necessary that such impropriety of feeling should in all cases be established by eviden e extrinsic to the comment which is the subj ct of the complaint For whether fair comment is to be regarded as falling under a branch of the law of privilege or not it cannot excuse an injury arising not from the mere act of criticism but from a state of mind in the critic which is in it elf unjustifiable and the excuse may be so forfeited either by reason of an evil intent in him or by reason of mere recklessness in making an unwarrantable assertion For then the comment would not be fair comment at all Apart from extrinsic evidence of malice protection must be withheld even from what purports to be criticism if it states as a fact to be inferred from the book criticised an imputation for which the book itself contains absolutely no foundation whatever The right of fair comment involves two essentials first that the imputation should be comment on the work criticised and second that it should be fair,—that is to say that if it professes to be an inference drawn from the contents of that work it must be an inference which it is possible to draw therefrom

Good faith requires not indeed logical infallibil ity but due care and attention But how far erroneous actions or statements are to be imputed to want of due care and caution must in each ca e be considered with reference to the general circum stances and the capacity and intelligence of the person whose conduct is in question It is only to be expected that the honest conclu ions of a calm and philosophical mind may differ very largely from the honest conclusions of a person excited by sectarian zeal and untrained to habits of preci e reasoning At the same time it must be borne in mind that good faith in the formation or expression of an opinion can afford no protection to an imputa tion which does not purport to be based on that on such evidence as is supplied by the public per formance It follows that an imputation on an author made by a critic without refer nce express or implied to the work under criticism if in terms so general as to be capable of conveying an

he had in his mind passages therein supporting the imputation The respon ibility of the critic is to be gauged by the effect which his comment is calculated to produce and not by what he says was his intention. It is not enough that he should intend to form his opinion on the work before him He is also bound in the words of the exceptions to express his opinion with due care and caution and to give the public no ground for supposing that he is speaking of anything but the performance submitted to its judgment EMPEROR v ABDOOL WADOOD (1907)

As to the fact of the appointment it was not apparent at what stage of the suit the question had first been raised whether the deceased had been of sound and disposing mind at the time of making it The first Court found that he had been of sound mind at the time but the Chief Court on appeal reversed this finding and added that he had been in their opinion unduly influenced As these

———— Pledgee taking over the property pledged crediting the value as if it had been sold to him—Wrongful convers on—Absence of proof of damage to pledgor—Account—Interest Where a pledgee having power to sell for default takes over as if upon a sale to himself the property pledged without the authority of the [illegible] borrower afterwards on redeeming a part was led to believe that the paper returned was the whole of that which remained unsold in the bank s possession The bank however had taken over part as if sold to itself crediting the price Held that the bank could not after this treat the securities as still subject to the pledge although this transaction had not put an end to the contract of pledge so as to entitle the pledgor to have back the paper without payment of the loan and interest The bank was no longer a pledgee of this paper but having converted it to the bank s own use might have been liable in damages for the value including the interest thereon However had this liability been enforced the pledgor could not have had credit in the loan account for the proceeds of the paper The cessation of interest on the loan was more to his advantage than to receive the interest on the [illegible] dence of damage to him resulting from the conversion The first Court decreed an account wrongly deciding that interest could not run upon the loan which the amount of the paper transferred by the bank to itself purported to wipe off from the date of the transfer On this point as well as because there was no proof of damage to the pledgor the High Court reversing that decree had rightly dismissed the pledgor s suit NECKRAM DOBAY v BANK OF BENGAL I. 61. ——— Possession of one co sharer when adverse—Limitation—Co sharer —Mortgage—Mortgage by three co sharers—Redemption by one of several mortgagors—Right of the other mortgagors to sue for redemption—Period of limitation for such suit In 1847 the property in dispute was mortgaged by three co sharers D A and R In 1859 P alone redeemed the property and mortgaged it again to a third person. In 1882 the heirs of D and A brought a suit to redeem the whole of the property or their portions of it The defence to the suit was that it was barred by limitation being brought more than twelve years after R had redeemed the property and R s possession subsequent to such redemption having been adverse to co sharers interests in it as a lienor and as such his possession was not adverse to them It did not contradict but rather implied and preserved their ultimate proprietary right In the case of a co sharer holding after redemption limitation is computed only from the date when the possession becomes adverse by the assertion of an exclusive title and submission to the right thus set up in analogy to the provision which bars an excluded sharer generally after the lapse of twelve years from the time when he becomes aware of his exclusion. As long as possession can be referred to a right consistent with the subsistence of an ownership in being at its commencement so long must the possession be referred to that right rather than to a right which contradicts the ownership RAMCHANDRA YASHVANT SIRPOTDAR v SADASHIV ABAJI SIRPOTDAR I L R 11 Bom 422

3 PARTIES TO PROCEEDINGS

1. ———— Parties claiming to be in possession of land the subject of dispute right of to appear in proceedings—Criminal Procedure Code s 145 Before taking action under s 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the Magis trate is bound to be satisfied from a police report or other information as to the likelihood of a breach of the peace and he is also bound to make an order in writing stating the grounds of his being so satisfied and this must be served on the parties to the dispute for it is the intention of the law not only that Magistrates should have sufficient grounds for proceeding under s 145 but that they should inform the parties concerned of the grounds on which they are proceeding Parties who though not actually involved in the dispute claim to be in possession of lands which are the subject of proceedings under s 145 should not be shut out from giving evidence in support of their claims. To do so would undoubtedly occasion very serious prejudice and interference with any possession which they might be able to establish QUEEN EMPRESS v GOBIND CHUNDRA DAS

a party in place of his father B D K and B S were made parties without any fresh proceeding under s. 145 of the Code The case was heard on 27th June and 7th July and on 17th July the Magistrate found as regards the possession in favour of D K Held by PETHERAM C J and TREVELYAN J (PAMPINI J dissenting) that since the possession to be enquired into was the possession at the time of the initiation of the proceedings the words parties concerned in the dispute meant parties concerned at that time there was no power in such a proceeding to introduce parties who were not concerned in the original dispute No order could therefore be made against B S and the proceedings were bad as against him. Per PAMPINI J—The preliminary proceeding under s 145 of the Code may and in many cases must partake of the character of a general citation to all the parties concerned in the dispute to appear and it is not necessary for the Magistrate to confine his final order as to possession to the parties whom he may have named in the preliminary proceeding The Magistrate had power to substitute the name of B S for that of his father without commencing the proceedings de novo The alteration in s 145 of Act X of 1882 the present Criminal Procedure Code of the language of s 530 of the old Code Act X of 1872 implies that the Magistrate is to decide on the possession not at the time of the initiation of the proceedings but at the time of recording the evidence If there was any error in the proceedings it was one cured by s 537 of the Code BECHU SHEIKH v DEB KUMARI DASI
